

Summary:

I am overall pleased with how the project turned out, even if it did not reach my full vision. The page is presented in a way that entices users and effectively informs them while also being fully responsive. I particularly like the website design I chose as it reflects TCNJ's style and color schemes. Anybody scrolling through the page would know this information and the page is dedicated to TCNJ data. I also am happy with the text and SVG rectangles formatted correctly on the page as this feature took me a long time to figure out. Among my toughest challenges was learning Bootstrap's language but it got easier the more I used it. It was also difficult to fully understand how SVGs work and what dimensions to use. It took quite a bit of research to comprehend how to draw and implement one. I think the only special aspect I would want a user to take special notice of is the data itself because it can reveal so much about TCNJ and our community, though the typewriter effect on h1 is another feature I would like to promote.
